

Those who believe that students should study abroad give their reasons as follows. The first reason is that after students finish their study abroad, they will have more job opportunities. It is commonly accepted that the students who have the experience of studying abroad can more easily find a satisfactory job. Another reason is that study abroad helps to cultivate students' independence. In other words, they have to learn to how take care of themselves and how to get along well with others.

However, further analysis would make it clear that study abroad has more disadvantages. In the first place, study abroad can easily lead to students' psychological problems. Researches reveal that because they live far away from their parents, relatives and friends, they often suffer from psychological problems such as loneliness and homesickness. In the second place, study abroad lays a heavy financial burden on the students' families. As is known to all, students have to spend a large sum of money on the tuition fees and the living expenses.
